If nothing else, Fighting Illini center Kofi Cockburn should be well-rested when he takes the floor in College Park considering he played only 22 of a possible 50 minutes in his team's double-OT loss to Purdue on Monday due to foul trouble. His 10 points and five rebounds were both season-lows to match the playing time as he fouled out for the first time all season. Cockburn has put together 11 double-doubles in his 14 games and finished with 23 points and 18 rebounds, including a season-best seven offensive boards, shooting 9-for-12 from the field in a dominant performance in a 76-64 triumph in Champaign on Jan. 6. Terps interim head coach Danny Manning anticipates that 6-foot-11 Qudus Wahab and 6-foot-9 Julian Reese will have a better idea of how to handle the Illinois center the second time around and is looking forward to getting this rematch at home considering his team led 34-30 at the break two weeks ago. Maryland shot 6-for-16 from 3-point range and got 17 points from forward Donta Scott but was outrebounded 41-26 and shot 12-for-20 from the free-throw line, giving away points they badly needed. Andre Curbelo didn't play in that game for Illinois but has rejoined the team after a mental break and was the silver lining in Monday afternoon's loss, rallying his team with Cockburn unavailable and finishing with 20 points, a team-high six boards and three assists in 26 minutes, committing no turnovers. The Puerto Rican guard who won Big Ten Sixth Man of the Year backing up current Bulls rookie Ayo Dosunmu last season figures to be the x-factor as the Illini goes out and chases a title but figures to have his ups and downs as he gets back in a rhythm. Maryland should be able to capitalize if he's sloppy and the visitors don't shoot straight, so expect at least a cover in a game that should be tight in the closing minutes.
